

Send Me Your Sexts

This Hilarious Sexting Project Is The Funniest NSFW Thing You'll Watch Today

Adam Kovac
September 1, 2015

SHARE

TWEET

2.4K
SHARES

ARTICLE CONTINUES BELOW

It's probably for the best that mankind's early sexts are lost to history.

Back in the primitive days of AOL and dial-up, we were limited to digitally grunting "A/S/L?" and "wanna cyber?" to each other to get our rocks off. Kids these days have no idea how good they have it with cameras, Snapchats and plausible deniability (nobody believes your phone was "hacked," but odds are, they can't prove it wasn't).

Sexting has gotten so advanced that artist Eileen Yaghoobian has taken notice — and centered her newest project around our virtual dirty talk.

Titled Send Me Your Sexts, Yaghoobian takes smutty conversations and directs short films using them as the dialogue. While the results can be somewhat Fellini-esque (the latest is a 10-minute long surreal nightmare involving pinball, pizza, tasseled bras, all of which is based off just a few lines of text that begins with "Partying tonight?"), Yaghoobian clearly has something to say about the current state of dating.

RELATED VIEWING: Porn Stars Read Mean Tweets About Them

If you've got steamy, silly or shocking sexts on your phone, you're invited to contribute them. Who knows? Maybe that time you drunkenly iMessaged the pretty girl in your communications class that you'd like her to "nuzzle my baby-making swizzle-stick" could be cinematic gold. (Though if you've used any of those terms, get help, you sicko.)

FLIRTING

CYBERSEX

TEXTING

COMEDY

VIRAL

YOU MAY LIKE